

The Land Defender's Call

Tara Houska

---

Protests against extractive projects, whether ridiculed or violently quashed, are critical defences of nature and wellbeing, both under attack from global corporations, oligarchs, and complicit governments. Indigenous peoples give voice to the change in vision necessary for a stronger position in challenging times.

Laughter and the buzz of conversation drift across the United States Capitol concrete steps. The sun is shining brightly as an antipipeline protest song picks up voices.

One by one, the folks with interlocked arms are walked off by a single police officer as onlookers cheer. Citations are issued, demonstrators rejoin the crowd. New friendships and connections are made. After the banners are rolled up, the crowd disperses to their evening plans.

Two thousand miles away, next to a giant steel pipe cutting through the forest, the same protest song tries to pick up steam. It is quickly replaced by confused shouting and pained voices. Indigenous protestors and allies are being maced and tackled to the ground by police in riot gear. Private security guards hired by the pipeline company surround the group and chat with officers in a waiting paddy wagon.

Those in cable ties will spend days or weeks in a cell, facing charges ranging from simple trespass to domestic terrorism. The story is in the local media, then the national news. Elected officials pick up their phones to discuss the pipeline. A state environmental justice committee is created. A proposed domestic conservation policy gains another sponsor. And the pipeline keeps barreling through the forest.

Photo by Harry Cunningham on Unsplash

Ten thousand miles away, another land defender has been assassinated. Their grieving family calls for justice, for an end to the industrial project with its hired mercenaries and deadly toxins. A lithium mine for electric battery production is poisoning the water; the animals are all sick and so are those who still live off the land. The murder of the land defender makes a media cycle: their death is added to the total reported annually by the United Nations, by global non-profits. Another resolution calling for human rights is passed by a committee. A financial institution pledges to strengthen its human rights standards. And on the ground, the fighting intensifies. Sometimes the colonising extractors even pack up and leave.

Intentional arrest as a pressure tactic spans generations and movements. Sometimes arrest is no more than a citation. At other times, it is a calculated risk to delay the progression of an extractive project and create more pressure. In other places, arrest is a deadly risk. In every instance it is part of a movement ecosystem pushing for change.

Yet, too often in climate spaces, particularly those led by the so-called West, civil disobedience garners responses ranging from amusement to annoyance. The “real work” – climate policy, aspirational goals, electrification of the grid – is being done with little to no acknowledgment of what it takes to achieve substantive, lasting change. Consumerism and decolonisation are almost entirely absent concepts. Indigenous land stewardship is largely relegated to romanticised imagery and phrases.

Civil rights are not and have never been comfortably won. It defies logic that oligarchs and corporations destroying the natural world for profit would be any less violent to change than oppressive regimes benefitting the few. It defies logic to trivialise human beings responding with immediacy and urgency to report after report speaking of climate boiling, tipping points affecting billions of creatures, species extinctions. It is almost as if those with the macro solutions can envisage no other way of being than that which has brought humankind to this point, that we are utterly incapable of reclaiming our collectivity, our purpose beyond extractivism and creature comforts.

After decades of learning from my people's knowledge keepers, from the web of life and the Indigenous values that have kept eighty per cent of the world's biodiversity alive, I understand the risks I take defending the physical Earth with acts of love for a relative. To me, the Earth is not a summation of resources to be consumed. It is a living, breathing relative who we must be in mutuality with for our own survival.

To me, the Earth is not a summation of resources to be consumed. It is a living, breathing relative who we must be in mutuality with for our own survival.

Our foolish, short-sighted, arrogant beliefs that we have dominion over nature got us here. It is no less foolish, shortsighted, and arrogant to believe we can solve the climate crisis we are waging from the mindset of dominion. Survival means necessary, radical repair of our relationship with nature, which can and must take numerous pathways, including personal risk for the benefit of all.

These direct acts are neither cutesy nor extreme. Neither are they a silver bullet in this fight that is both intergenerational and existential.

In my experience as a land defender calling out from some of the last beautiful, healthy places under siege by endless greed, I've found bravery and selflessness to be a source of inspiration for people all over the world living through the

Our Mother needs us, with all our empathy and rejection of the disconnection killing us all. I hope more of us realise our hearts and our humility are just as critical as our minds when we choose to stay or go.

bleakness of climate science and overwhelming existentialism. I've found standing collectively and physically with the Earth to be a pathway to directly reframing the narrative of the world we can envisage while providing a glimpse of reconnection through an act of love. Some direct actions lay bare the weakness of destroyers, bound by the same physicalities as we all are. I cannot adequately convey the eyes of a person who has stopped a multi-national industry from its planet-killing for a few hours, for a few days, for a few months or even years. It is power. It is empowerment. It is reclamation. Our Mother needs us, with all our empathy and rejection of the disconnection killing us all. I hope more of us realise our hearts and our humility are just as critical as our minds when we choose to stay or go.

---

Related links:

- The Jus Semper Global Alliance
  - Álvaro J. de Regil: Transitioning to Geocratia the People and Planet and Not the Market Paradigm — First Steps
  - Álvaro J. de Regil: The Deceptive Delusions of Green Capitalism
  - Álvaro J. de Regil: True Sustainability and Degrowth in the Citizens Imaginary
  - Alejandro Pedregal and Juan Bordera: Toward an Ecosocialist Degrowth
  - Jason Hickel: Degrowth is About Global Justice
  - Milena Büchs and Max Koch: Challenges for the degrowth transition: The debate about wellbeing
  - Alberto Garzón Espinosa: The Limits to Growth: Ecosocialism or Barbarism
  - J. Barth and M. Jacobs: Sustainable Prosperity in an Uncertain Future: A shared agenda between green growth and degrowth
  - Joyeeta Gupta et al: Earth system boundaries and Earth system justice: sharing the ecospace
  - Josefina L. Martínez: Lujuy burns: postcards of a rebellion against lithium plundering
  - María González Reyes: "The future is in the past"
-

❖ About Jus Semper: The Jus Semper Global Alliance aims to contribute to achieving a sustainable ethos of social justice in the world, where all communities live in truly democratic environments that provide full enjoyment of human rights and sustainable living standards in accordance with human dignity. To accomplish this, it contributes to the liberalisation of the democratic institutions of society that have been captured by the owners of the market. With that purpose, it is devoted to research and analysis to provoke the awareness and critical thinking to generate ideas for a transformative vision to materialise the truly democratic and sustainable paradigm of People and Planet and NOT of the market.

❖ About the author: Tara Houska (Couchiching First Nation) is an attorney, land defender, and mother. She is the founder of Giniw Collective, an Indigenous-women, two-spirit-led collaborative committed to environmental protection and life in balance.

❖ About this Commentary: “The Land Defender’s Call” was originally published in English by Green European Journal in June 2024. This paper has been published under Creative Commons, CC-BY-NC-ND 4.0. You are welcome to reproduce the material for non-commercial use, crediting the author and the original publisher.

❖ Quote this paper as: Tara Houska — The Land Defender’s Call — The Jus Semper Global Alliance, December 2024.

❖ Tags: democracy, capitalism, degrowth, ecology, climate crisis, Global North, Global South, indigenous peoples, Mother Earth, capitalism, imperialism, colonialism.

❖ The responsibility for opinions expressed in this work rests only with the author(s), and its publication does not necessarily constitute an endorsement by The Jus Semper Global Alliance.

Under Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 License
<https://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc-nd/4.0/>

© 2024. The Jus Semper Global Alliance
Portal on the net: <https://www.jussemper.org/>
e-mail: informa@jussemper.org